10:15 Developing a harmonized surface stormwater storage dataset

Krissy Hopkins, USGS

Over the past 8 years, Krissy and her team at USGS has looked at the impacts of environmental site design on streams in Clarksburg, MD. In this presentation, Krissy will give a brief overview of approaches the team is testing to remotely map surface stormwater storage features using high resolution datasets. Krissy will discuss the types of features her team could detect and the type of information they could attach to those features (type, size, volume, etc.). She will then lead a discussion with the group about if and how such as dataset would be useful.
